DESCRIPTION

We are all familiar with the Miranda Warning. We've seen it issued on countless TV shows and movies, but do we really understand it? The concepts can seem simple on the surface, but do we understand them on a deep enough level to produce an ASL equivalent that affords Deaf people the opportunity to knowingly exercise or waive their rights?

This workshop will break down the principles of the Miranda Warning in a methodical way that will leave participants with options on how to interpret the Miranda Warning depending on the client.

Additional topics to be discussed: When must the Miranda Warning be given? When can the police question someone without Mirandizing them? What are best practices when staffing assignments involving the police and what are the risks of interpreting for the police? Join us to learn the answers to these questions and more!

OBJECTIVES

Participants will be able to:

- Outline three complex elements of the Miranda Warning.
- Model at least two differentiated interpretations of the Miranda Warning based on varying scenarios and clients.
- Create a list of at least three (personal/skill based) qualification requirements before accepting interpreting assignments involving police.
